November 5-12, 2008

- UML Delegation visits Belfast - Frank Talty, Ann Marie Hurley, Steve McCarthy, Alex Case, Susan Brauhut and Bridgette Budhlall to further investigate partnership activities between Queen's and UMass Lowell. Several academic programs and strategic priorities at Queens appeared to correspond and complement programs at UMass Lowell and included but were not limited to:
  - Interdisciplinary sciences and engineering with emphasis on nano-manufacturing, bio-manufacturing and bio-technology and nanomedicine.
  - Technology transfer and commercialization efforts such as the UMass Incubator and M2D2 centers.
  - Sonic Arts in Music.
  - Irish Studies.
  - Physical Well-Being, Sports Performance and Health, and Work Environment.
- In addition to Queens University, with great assistance from Dr. Johanna Bruneau, Professor Ann Marie Hurley's daughter, a recent PhD from Trinity College Dublin and currently a post-doctoral fellow at Dublin City University, those two institutions were also contacted and arrangements were made for the UMass Lowell delegation to visit staff and faculty at each institution in Dublin.

The objective of the team was to act as emissaries for the University of Massachusetts administration and faculty to the Ireland institutions of higher learning. The mission, resources, expertise and strategic plans for the administration and faculty of U Mass was compared to that of the visited institution and complementarities discussed openly with the leadership at each visited campus. With each institution, clear common interests were identified. Furthermore, individual faculty with areas of common interest on each campus were sought, identified and matched. In particular, the U Mass Lowell team focused on areas representing opportunities for:

1. Faculty and student exchange.
  2. Research, scholarship and resource collaboration and sharing.
  3. Programmatic integration and fund raising potential.
- After each of the Universities was visited, the UMass Lowell team identified areas and individuals of research and scholarship that could facilitate the above objectives.
